(Condom) Size Can Matter

June 1, 2009 By James Wortman

The bad news? A recent study found that men with larger and smaller penises were more likely to complain about condom size and comfort—too tight or too loose—than men with average-sized endowments. They were also more likely to have negative perceptions about prophylactics. The good news? More manufacturers are creating condoms for almost every length and width. So, don’t resort to latexless sex, leaving you vulnerable to HIV and other STIs. Shop around for that perfect fit
