Thabang Lebese, South African Soccer Star, Died of AIDS

March 9, 2012

Thabang Lebese, the late soccer star from South Africa, died of AIDS-related complications, Kick Off reports. Florence Lebese, his mother, confirmed the cause of death in a statement. After his death last month, the family initially blamed the hospital, Sport 24 reports. When friends told the family of his HIV-positive status, the family issued an apology. “It was his wish to have disclosed his HIV status himself; unfortunately he did not get this opportunity,” his mother said. She also thanked South Africans for their support following her son’s death.
